

About Clean Tomorrow

Clean Tomorrow is committed to advancing policies that reduce climate emissions by turning policy ambition into action. We work to accelerate innovation and the growth of clean energy.

Clean Tomorrow is nonpartisan and outcome-driven non-profit, working to reimagine the federal innovation pipeline, support clean energy deployment, and enable the decarbonization of our nation's industrial sectors. We focus on achieving tangible and short-term results at the state and national level by working with diverse coalitions of policymakers, industry, and advocates.

To achieve ambitious emissions reductions and meet growing energy demand, we must increase investments in innovative clean energy solutions, build and generate products and energy domestically, and remove barriers to clean energy deployment through transformative state siting policy.

Investment in clean energy innovation is crucial for the health of the economy and the environment. Unclogging the innovation pipeline will help scale the most promising technologies. We're working to identify and support new policies at each critical stage — from discovery through deployment — to power the engine of our economy.

Domestic industrial emissions are set to eclipse those of any other sector by the early 2030s. And with competitor economies building new industrial facilities at a significant pace, we must successfully innovate and deploy clean industrial manufacturing technologies and bring clean industrial products to the global market to meet our climate and economic goals. Clean industrial technology can help us keep our competitive edge.

Clean energy deployment is losing ground to local opposition and siting prohibitions every day. As of January 2023, 15% of counties effectively banned new renewable energy projects. We are developing state policy solutions that will improve the location and design of clean energy projects, increase community benefits, and build new clean energy where it's needed most.
